

Published based on Gambling, Religion, and the Bible - Reconciled Once and for All

Gambling, Religion, and the Bible - Reconciled Once and for All

Ask just about any Christian today whether gambling is a sin, or at the least if gambling is a bad thing to be doing. Universally the believer will unflinchingly answer "Yes."

- After all, he's heard that all his life.
- After all, he's heard that from the pulpit at church.
- After all, he's heard that in Sunday School.
- After all, his friends all say gambling is a sin.

For such a universally accepted negative act, one might think that perhaps God should also be given a chance to speak on the matter. After all, He created the universe; doesn't He deserve to at least be heard?

What does He show us in His book that He inspired for us? Does He show us any truths about gambling, about chance, about whether either is a sin or not?

It turns out that God does show us some rather clear aspects of gambling. And what He shows... seems to go counter to what virtually every Christian today says about it.

Whether gambli

Price:

You can also find this article published on Gambling, Religion, and the Bible - Reconciled Once and for All, and on the tag pages believer, Bible, gambling, pulpit, sin, sunday school.