Betting on horse races is not simple as looking at a horse, choosing which one is the biggest or the most muscled, and placing a bet on it. There are key points to consider when betting on horse races. In order to make a viable prediction, you really have to know the strengths and weaknesses of a horse.

It is not always possible to follow around all horse during their races. Because races happen in different parts of the world, you cannot possibly travel around the world just to see each of the horses run. You also have a life and family you have to attend to. This is exactly why there is a person which is called a horse racing tipster.

A racing tipster is the person who has been with horses long enough to know each horse's strengths and weaknesses. They compare the strengths of each horse with that of the other horses and make a prediction based on those. Because a racing tipster is expected to make reliable predictions because he has been with horses for years. They also have followers who seek their predictions in order to win instant cash.

In times past, horse race tipsters are people. These days, because of technology and the internet, online sites are now equipped with horse racing tips and they even give out their tips for free. Usually, tipsters get a certain percentage out of the winnings. This is where human tipsters get their pay from.

Sadly, however, their services have now become obsolete as people from any part of the world can now follow horse racing events from different parts of the world. This is because most races are streamed online.
